

“A man with few friends or no circle at all, that's someone you don't wanna cross. He's learned through tough experiences that quality always beats quantity. He doesn't need a crowd to feel strong. His power comes from within.

While others chase after validation he chooses to walk alone. He's seen the fake friendships, the drama and the betrayals, and he's cut all of it out. Now he stands untouched in peace. He doesn't need anyone to make him whole. He's complete on his own. The end.

One genuine friend holds more value than a hundred phony ones. His circle is small. His trust is earned. And anyone who brings trouble is swiftly removed. He values his time, treating it like royalty. He knows what he's after, and never settles for less.

So, when you meet a man with a small circle or none at all, don't mistake it for weakness. That's real strength. That's confidence. He doesn't need your approval, because he's already won the only fight that truly matters - the one with himself! – Jordan Peterson
